Time Saving Dingo

"I'm in the process of purchasing a Dingo. I'll be using it for installation work on small sites, and for any application I would use heavier equipment. It's so much more efficient for smaller jobs. I've rented the Dingo in the past for various reasons. I had a large construction site where we removed over 4,700 pounds of construction debris and added over 50 yards of soil amendments. We then used the tiller attachment to make a good, mixed soil structure for planting beds.

"I chose the Toro Dingo, because they are more reliable than the other brands. I've also found them particularly good for small jobs. They make a three man, two day job into a two man, one day job. The other thing I really appreciate is the sustainability aspect. They are less disruptive to the soil, produce less emissions, and are easier to transport than bigger machines, and that helps me in my drive to be more sustainable. I would definitely recommend them to anybody. There's an application for every need."

Martin's Top Notch Customer Service

"We've been working with Martin for several years. Their strength is personalized customer service. They can always help you out when you're in a tight spot. I really needed them to come through for this job. It was a very tight schedule, and I needed two machines quickly. Martin was able to come through with everything. Andy Novak is my salesman, and he has been great. He's what has made working with Martin such a great experience."
